What is Lifelong learning?

The need for lifelong learning is being driven by the imperatives of the global knowledge economy. Performing in the global economy and functioning in a global society requires mastery of technical, interpersonal and methodological skills. These skills include a range of literacies (health, financial, computer etc.), foreign languages mathematics, science, teamwork and the ability to learn on one's own.

Therefore, the definition of literacy for the knowledge economy/society therefore can no longer be limited to primary literacy in english and the basic manipulation of numbers.

'JFLL has been instrumental in the transfer of literacy skills to both team members and community stakeholders. This has laid the foundation for better access to skills training and higher education.

We value this partnership because it supports our dual goal of taking employees to higher levels of global competitiveness, while we pursue sustainable development with members of our host communities.'

- Christopher Buckmaster, Employment, Compensation & Benefits Administrator
Jamaico/ Alcoa Minerals of Jamaica Ltd.

“Functional numeracy and literacy are key attributes for social and economic success. Our partnership, therefore, with JFLL is strategic.

The confidence of our employees participating in the programme has increased and there have been noticeable improvements in the quality of output including their interaction with fellow employees. We are particularly pleased to note the improved levels of tolerance and discipline displayed on the job.”

Marcia Osborne, Human Resource Development Manager, Jamaica Property Co. Ltd
